However, to get satisfactory results machinery must be properly designed, intelligently used and kept in good repair, otherwise much trouble and disappointment will result and there will be a tendency to condemn the machines and get back to old methods. To avoid such unsatisfactory results the modern street railway maintenance engineer, or his assistant, should have as one of his strongest mental assets a thorough and practical knowledge of machinery and mechanics. Mr. Youxt: Von have heard these very interesting papers; now. let us have some discussion. Mr. Homer 15. Murdoch (San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways): I would like to ask Mr. Chamberlain the reason they had for discontinuing the use of welded joints. Mr. Chamberlain: We used them lor about five years. They gave good results at first, but pretty soon...
