In Great Britain and on the Continent much work is being done, and in America the good work of the Audubon Societies goes steadily on. Oklahoma and Nebraska are the latest States to fall into line; and how widespread the movement is may be gathered from a glance at the Supplement to The Auk (vol. xx. , new series, No. 1, January, 1903), where maps, and c. , are given, showing--(1) the States where Audubon Societies exist, and (2) those which have adopted the American O. U. model law for the protection of birds. A full account of what has been done by the various legislatures up to...
