Never mind, dad, said I, itll come up all right to-morrow morning--have a chance to get straightened out, over night, you know. I d know, Oaky, I d know, said dad, and he looked so tired and anxious that I couldnt help pitying him. Ive kind o lost my holt on things. I aint got much o this worlds goods, Oaky, but Id give all I hev nt holt, s the law says, f I was only gifted w-with th paower o a J-Joshua, sost I could c-command th sun t stand still, till I got this thing straightened out. Just then the doctor drove into the yard, and ma was right behind him. The doctor sung out: Hello, John! whats up I am! said dad. Pretty good! said the doctor, feeling well Fair t middlin, said dad, barrin my head. For the land sakes! John Achorn, said ma, why dont you go in and put on the rest of your clothes--wheres your other shoe There, now, Maria, said dad, dont yer fret bout my cloes! Ill hev em on b th time yer get th b-breakfas! That made ma and the doctor laugh. Come in, said the doctor, come in the house and Ill fix you up, all right. So we all went in, and the doctor gave 3ad some medicine that braced him up a little after awhile, so he could talk without stuttering. So, yer...
