Just shy of his thirteenth birthday, Daniel Doyle, a backward, diminutive, Irish lad was conscripted into the British army. Sent to America, he took part in the Battle of New Orleans as a drummer boy. Captured during the battle, Daniel was kidnapped by a mountain man and taken north, where he almost lost his life during a blizzard near a frontier town called Saint Louis. Only his psychic abilities saved him from freezing to death beside the Mississippi River. As he matured, Daniel came to understand more about the psychic powers he was blessed with at birth. He quickly learned to use those powers to control and manipulate others. Daniels red hair and penetrating green eyes were considered a good omen by the Chickasaw Indians living on the Mississippi River. A tribe adopted him as a blood brother and he contentedly lived with them for several years. While living in their village, he rescued a young white girl from river pirates and helped her reunite with her parents at Fort Smith on the border of Mexican owned Texas. Serving as a scout for the Cavalry, Daniel became a captive of the Chiricahua Apache. However, he soon discovered that he could control their powerful Medicine Man using his gift. Lead to a cave by a ghostly apparition, he was ordered by their god, Usen, to teach the ways of the white man to a young brave named Goyathlay. A warrior destined to be called Geronimo. Rescued from the Mexican wilderness, Daniel traveled up the Mississippi River and crossed western Pennsylvania by canal boat. At Liverpool, Pennsylvania he chose to finally give up his travels. While not revealing his psychic abilities, he resided on a farm in the...
