Not illustrated. 1817 Excerpt: .was cultivated, and women rarely seen in the fields; and although the long waggons still existed, yet the ploughs seemed less cumbrous, and the harrows had here and there iron teeth. Between Abbeville and Noailles, in a long sandy bank, the swallows issued from their holes, where perhaps they had been sleeping all the winter. The manufactures of Abbeville and Beauvais did not seem to have kept pace with the improvement of the soil during the revolution. In 1788, Beauvais employed 120 workmen in manufacturing carpets of all sorts under the direction of Monsieur Demenou, who retired from the concern in 1792. In 1802, Monsieur de Berderbusch, the prefect of the department, re-established the business, and carried it to a high degree of perfection; but at this moment the number of workmen employed does not exceed 40. The principal church at Beauvais is the cathedral, which is famous for the lightness and boldness of the roof of its choir, a master-piece of Gothic architecture, and unequalled in France. The foundations of this church were laid in 991, but were never finished till the Millennium was completed; and it was certain that Jerusalem, which they expected to be rebuilt, still remained without one stone upon another, and that the thousand years of the reign of Christ were not begun. As early as the middle of the fourth century the Millenarians interpreted the Apocalypse too literally, and conceived what was meant to portray the improved state of Christianity in...
